- 1. Prior to Jupe 1952 the Chinese Communist government in southwestern Sinkiang Province had adopted a policy of deporting all persons whose families originally migrated to Sinkiang from the area which is now West Pakistan. Deportation was preceded by confiscation of property, and the persons being deported were accompanied to the Sinkiang-Pakistan border by an armed guard.
- In May 1952 armed check-posts along the route between Yarkand (77-16, 38-24) and the Pakistan border were as follows:

P'uli (Tash Kurghan, 75-14, 37-47) Beyik (75-15, 37-11) Mintaka Karaul (75-01, 37-08) Karchinai (74-59, 37-05)<sup>2</sup> Lup Guz (74-52, 37-03)

200 soldiers and a wireless station

- 3. During January and February 1952 all Chinese troops in the Yarkand area4 were shipped out for duty in Korea. They were transported to Urumchi (87-35, 43-48) in American jeeps and in Dodge trucks, each truck carrying 25 soldiers and equipment. These troops were replaced by local inhabitants, recruited under the direction of a Soviet officer 5 who was in charge of military recruitment for the area.
- 4. In May 1952 the road from Kashgar (75-58, 39-29) to Irkeshtam (73-50, 39-40) on the USSR-Sinkiang border was closed to all public traffic. Non-military travelers had to enter Sinkiang from the USSR via Kuldja (81-14, 43-55) and Urumchi.

- 5. In May 1952 the road between Kashgar and Yarkand was being maintained in motorable condition. The roads from Yarkand to P'uli and from P'uli to the Mintaka Pass (74-53, 37-01) were still traversable only by pony.
- 6. In May 1952 all major government departments, including those of agriculture, police, secret police, magistrates, revenue, and engineering, were headed by Chinese<sup>8</sup> officials and advised by Soviet officials. Except in official capacities there were few Russians in southwestern Sinkiang at that time.
- 7. In May 1952 cotton cloth from China, and sugar and poor-grade cloth from the USSR were available at the local market in Yarkand. The Russian language was taught in all schools.
